DRAFT

EU and ILO to start promoting global asbestos ban

Time: Wednesday 9 June 2006 12–13

Place: Finnish Institute of Occupational Health (Työterveyslaitos)
Haartmaninkatu 1 d, Helsinki, Finland

Asbestos kills 100 000 workers a year worldwide, according to the International Labour Office (ILO). About 40 countries have eliminated the use of asbestos, but in several countries it is still used e.g. in the construction industry. Some two million tons of asbestos is produced annually in e.g. Russia and Canada yearly.

In Finland asbestos was banned in 1994. Cancers caused by asbestos will still appear for the next twenty years, as it can take several decades to fall ill after exposure.

The European Commission, other EU Institutions and ILO are taking steps to start promoting a global asbestos ban. In the press conference Dr. Bernhard Brückner, member of the European Senior Labour Inspectors Committee (SLIC) and Mr. Jukka Takala, director of ILO's SafeWork programme and will describe the measures the EU and ILO are going to take.

Director Jaakko Itäkannas from the Finnish Ministry of Social Affairs and Health and the experts from the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health (FIOH) will talk about the regulations and health effects of asbestos, and an asbestos project in Estonia. The press conference will be chaired by professor Harri Vainio from the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health.
